My greatest success story was working with a particular grandmother, who, when asked, "Do you think you are the problem?" emphatically denied it. At the end of the course, she acknowledged that she was an enabler, caving in to pressure from her daughter and family to give them access to their vices and not addressing her role in the problems or issues at stake. We make changes like this in the lives and outlook of the people we interact with and seek to continue making these positive impacts as we continue to reach out to more in the community.
